naturally supposed his sport was sailing.
Poor Father, his training was engineering!
Cheerful and cowed
among the seadogs at the Sunday yacht club, he was never one of the crowd.

"Anchors aweigh," Daddy boomed in his bathtub,
"Anchors aweigh," when Lever Brothers offered to pay him double what the Navy paid.
I nagged for his dress sword with gold braid, and cringed because Mother, new caps on all her teeth, was born anew at forty. With seamanlike celerity, Father left the Navy,
and deeded Mother his property.

He was soon fired. Year after year, he still hummed "Anchors aweigh" in the tub—whenever he left a job, he bought a smarter car.
Father's last employer
was Scudder, Stevens and Clark, Investment Advisors, himself his only client.
While Mother dragged to bed alone,
read Menninger,
and grew more and more suspicious,
he grew defiant.
Night after night,
à la clarté déserte de sa lampe, he slid his ivory Annapolis slide rule across a pad of graphs—piker speculations! In three years he squandered sixty thousand dollars.
Smiling on all,
Father was once successful enough to be lost in the mob of ruling-class Bostonians.
As early as 1928,
he owned a house converted to oil, and redecorated by the architect of St. Mark's School. . . . Its main effect was a drawing room, "longitudinal as Versailles," its ceiling, roughened with oatmeal, was blue as the sea.
And once
nineteen, the youngest ensign in his class, he was "the old man" of a gunboat on the Yangtze.
