AMERICAN WOMEN WRITERS SERIES
Joanne Dobson, Judith Fetterley, and Elaine Showalter, series editors

ALTERNATIVE ALCOTT
Louisa May Alcott
Elaine Showalter, editor

GAIL HAMILTON: SELECTED WRITINGS
Susan Coultrap-McQuain, editor

MOODS
Louisa May Alcott
Sarah Elbert, editor

A NEW HOME, WHO'LL FOLLOW?
Caroline M. Kirland
Sandra A. Zagarrell, editor

STORIES FROM THE COUNTRY OF LOST BORDERS
Mary Austin
Marjorie Pryse, editor

QUICKSAND AND PASSING
Nella Larsen
Deborah E. McDowell, editor

CLOVERNOOK SKETCHES AND OTHER STORIES
Alice Cary
Judith Fetterley, editor

HOPE LESLIE
Catharine Maria Sedgwick
Mary Kelley, editor

THE HIDDEN HAND
E.D.E.N. Southworth
Joanne Dobson, editor

HOBOMOK AND OTHER WRITINGS
ON INDIANS
Lydia Maria Child
Carolyn L. Karcher, editor

"THE AMBER GODS" AND OTHER STORIES
Harriet Prentiss Spofford
Alfred Bendsen, editor

"HOW CELIA CHANGED HER MIND" AND SELECTED STORIES
Rose Terry Cooke
Elizabeth Ammons, editor

OLDTOWN FOLKS
Harriet Beecher Stewe
Dorothy Berlson, editor

THE LAMPLIGHTER
Maria Susanna Cummins
Nina Baym, editor

WOMEN ARTISTS, WOMEN EXILES: "MISS GRIEF" AND OTHER STORIES
Constance Fenimore Woolson
Joan Myers Weimer, editor

RUTH HALL AND OTHER WRITINGS
Fanny Fern
Joyce Warren, editor

AMERICAN WOMEN POETS OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY:
AN ANTHOLOGY
Cheryl Walker, editor

THE ESSENTIAL MARGARET FULLER
Jeffrey Steele, editor

RUTGERS UNIVERSITY PRESS
New Brunswick, New Jersey

1992
ADAH ISAACS MENKEN
(1839?–1868)

OF ALL THE WOMEN POETS in this collection, the one whose tombstone was inscribed Adah Isaacs Menken surely led the most unconventional and romantic life. She used many names during her lifetime, claimed to have been married six times (though she died at the age of twenty-nine), posed as Euro-American, Jewish, and Negro, electrified audiences in America and Europe with her scantily clad performances of Byron’s Mazeppa, and fraternized with Walt Whitman, Bret Harte, Charles Dickens, Mark Twain, George Sand, Alexandre Dumas (père), and Algrenon Swinburne. With the last two men on the list, she apparently had scandalous love affairs.

Recent biographical studies of her life claim that she was probably born in New Orleans to a “free man of color” and his wife, her given name being Phyllis E. Croi Théodore. Her career began when at fifteen she gave public readings of Shakespeare, published some poetry, and married her first husband Alexander Isaacs Menken, a rich Jewish businessman. After her marriage she converted to Judaism and learned Hebrew. Claiming that she was of Jewish descent, Adah published poems fervently endorsing Hebrew culture and is still revered as an important Jewish artist by some scholars. Though her marriage to Menken did not last, she retained her first husband’s name in death and asked for Jewish burial rites.

There is evidence of three more marriages in 1859, 1862, and 1866, but these had even less stability than her first one. Menken’s most prominent and continuous career was as an actress, and she is said to have earned as much as $5,000 a week during the height of her popularity. She lived lavishly, suffered terribly, was sometimes penniless, and not infrequently suicidal. In her more gregarious moods, she charmed and delighted Bohemians on both sides of the Atlantic, but she was forever searching for a stability she found impossible to achieve. She died in Paris on 10 August 1868, probably of pneumonia. In her poem “Infelix” she conveys her sense that her life has been a failure.

After her death, a volume of her collected poems appeared, entitled Infelixia, and, probably because of her notoriety, it went through twelve editions between 1868 and 1902. Joan R. Sherman, in her introduction to the poems, comments: “The poet of Infelixia speaks with two voices: hysterical and extremely hysterical.” Nevertheless, some of her poems are fascinating in their defiance of nineteenth-century conventions. “Judith” is a fearless assault upon feminine standards of propriety, an early version of what would later become a female genre: the woman warrior’s revenge poem. In contrast, a work like “Aspiration” would not seem out of place in Rufus Griswold’s anthology.

Adah Isaacs Menken was undoubtedly a talented woman. She certainly had a facility for learning languages and she rightly assessed the value of poets such as Whitman and Poe, both of whom (along with Swinburne) strongly influenced her work. On the other hand, she never put much time into developing her talents as a poet, and today her life seems more interesting than her art.

JUDITH

“Repent, or I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight thee with the sword of my mouth.”—Revelation ii. 16.

In the Apocrypha, Judith is the heroine who saves her native Bethulia by creeping into the enemy camp and slaying Nebuchadnezzar’s general, Holofernes.
Ashkelon is not cut off with the remnant of a valley.
Baldness dwells not upon Gaza.
The field of the valley is mine, and it is clothed in verdure.
The steepness of Baal-perazim is mine;
And the Philistines spread themselves in the valley of Rephaim.
They shall yet be delivered into my hands.
For the God of Battles has gone before me!
The sword of the mouth shall smite them to dust.
I have slept in the darkness—
But the seventh angel woke me, and giving me a sword of flame, points to the blood-ribbed cloud, that lifts his reeking head above the mountain.
Thus am I the prophet.
I see the dawn that heralds to my waiting soul the advent of power.
Power that will unseal the thunders!
Power that will give voice to graver!

Graves of the living;
Graves of the dying;
Graves of the sinning;
Graves of the loving;
Graves of despairing;
And oh! graves of the deserted!
These shall speak, each as their voices shall be loosed.
And the day is dawning.

Stand back, ye Philistines!
Practice what ye preach to me;
I heed ye not, for I know ye all.
Ye are living burning lies, and profanation to the garments which with stately steps ye sweep your marble palaces.
Your palaces of Sin, around which the damning evidence of guilt hangs like a reeking vapor.

Stand back!
I would pass up the golden road of the world.
A place in the ranks awaits me.
I know that ye are hedged on the borders of my path.
Lie and tremble, for ye well know that I hold with iron grasp the battle axe.

Creep back to your dark tents in the valley.
Slouch back to your haunts of crime.
Ye do not know me, neither do ye see me.
But the sword of the mouth is unsealed, and ye coil yourselves in slime and bitterness at my feet.
I mix your jeweled heads, and your gleaming eyes, and your hissing tongues with the dust.

My garments shall bear no mark of ye.
When I shall return this sword to the angel, your foul blood will not stain its edge.
It will glimmer with the light of truth, and the strong arm shall rest.

Stand back!
I am no Magdalene waiting to kiss the hem of your garment.
It is mid-day.
See ye not what is written on my forehead?

Place names given here refer to the Ashkelon area in southwest Palestine. The Plain of Rephaim is west of Jerusalem. In Friedrich Hebbel’s play (1841) Holofernes is Judith’s lover. Menken seems to be drawing on this variant.
I am Judith!
I wait for the head of my Holofernes!
Ere the last tremble of the conscious death-agony shall have shuddered, I will show it to ye with the long black hair clinging to the glazed eyes, and the great mouth opened in search of voice, and the strong throat all hot and reeking with blood, that will thrill me with wild unspeakable joy as it courses down my bare body and dabbles my cold feet!

My sensuous soul will quake with the burden of so much bliss.
Oh, what wild passionate kisses will I draw up from that bleeding mouth!
I will strangle this pallid throat of mine on the sweet blood!
I will revel in my passion.
At midnight I will feast on it in the darkness.
For it was that which thrilled its crimson tides of reckless passion through the blue veins of my life, and made them leap up in the wild sweetness of Love and agony of Revenge!

I am starving for this feast.
Oh forget not that I am Judith!
And I know where sleeps Holofernes.

Whose feverish brilliance looks a part of earth,
Yet quivers where the feet of angels are,
And seems the future crown in realms afar—
Beware! A spark thou art, and dost but see Thine own reflection in Eternity!

ASPIRATION

Poor, impious Soul! that fixes its high hopes
In the dim distance, on a throne of clouds,
And from the morning's mist would make the ropes
To draw it up amid acclaim of crowds—
Beware! That soaring path is lined with shrouds;
And he who braves it, though of sturdy breath,
May meet, half way, the avalanche and death!

O poor young Soul!—whose year-devouring glance
Fixes in ecstasy upon a star,

INFEREX

Where is the promise of my years;
Once written on my brow?
Ere errors, agonies and fears
Brought with them all that speaks in tears,
Ere I had sunk beneath my peers;
Where sleeps that promise now?

Naught lingers to redeem those hours,
Still, still to memory sweet!
The flowers that bloomed in sunny bowers
Are withered all; and Evil towers
Supreme above her sister powers
Of Sorrow and Deceit.

I look along the columned years,
And see Life's riven face,
Just where it fell, amid the jeers
Of scornful lips, whose mocking sneers,
For ever hiss within mine ears
To break the sleep of pain.

The title of the poem is Latin, meaning, the unfortunate one.